Semiconductor devices are fabricated in the form of substrates such as silicon wafers or other suitable semiconducting materials. The surface of these substrates may be covered with multiple layers including conductive, semiconductive, and insulating materials. Various process steps are used to fabricate the semiconductor devices including the deposition and removal of film materials from the surface of the wafer. Wafers are typically cleaned prior to the deposition of film layers in order to remove unwanted films or particles from the substrate surface. Typically, the cleaning process requires the use of a liquid agent such as NH₄OH, H₂SO₄, HCl, and combinations thereof. In addition, a liquid or gaseous peroxide may be used to clean the wafer. After the cleaning process,
